

Cloud provider expands open source integration

A major cloud and productivity solution provider wanted to increase support and integration for open source products and platforms.

ADDRESSING THE MANDATE

In order to promote the interoperability of their platform and partnership with open source communities, the client needed:

- Engineering expertise to build and integrate SDKs and tools that would allow open source technologies to function on the client's cloud platform
- Make it easier and less expensive for customers to develop, operate and maintain mixed cloud environments

THE RESULTS

Wider Product Reach

Our solution successfully helped the client's platform reach a wider range of open source developer communities

Production Grade Quality

The interoperability, security and reliability of the open source products on the client's cloud platform were tested for production grade results

THE CHALLENGES INVOLVED

01 Lack Of On-Premise Tools & Expertise

Building open source interoperability meant many of the client's existing developer toolsets needed to be changed or adapted

02 Shift in Strategy

Making the shift from a strategy aligned with creating products for a single technology ecosystem

THE APPROACH & THE SOLUTION

With our unique expertise with many industry-leading open source technologies, we were able to deploy teams with the right expertise. This enabled us to:

- Deeply integrate over 30 open source products on to the platform, including Node.js., Chef, Puppet, Docker, Kubernetes, MongoDB and Cloud DB
- Build the SDKs, specifically for Java and PHP
- Create tools that enabled open source developers to use the client's cloud platform
